Brigham and Women's Hospital/Massachusetts General Hospital Department of Emergency Medicine Fellowship in Health Policy and Social Emergency Medicine Research

The Fellowship in Health Policy and Social Emergency Medicine trains future leaders in emergency medicine to design, conduct, and translate innovative research and practice changes into health policy. Fellows divide their time between mentored health services or social EM research projects, class work, a policy practicum and clinical work in the Emergency Department of our nationally recognized hospitals. The fellowship is two years. Successful applicants must be board eligible in emergency medicine.

Fellows will have the opportunity to earn a Master's Degree from the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health or Kennedy School of Government. The program is designed for those seeking a successful and productive career at the intersection of health policy and emergency care. The curriculum is tailored to the fellow's interests and is divided into four areas:

- 1. Health Policy
- 2. Health Services Research
- 3. Translating Research to Policy
- 4. Social Emergency Medicine
